More JISC Historic Books Enhancements

This month we have released a number of new features in JISC Historic Books. All these features are based on user feedback, and have been recommended by our Advisory Board.

New sorting options: on the results screen there are now more sort options so as well as being able to sort results by Relevance and Date, users can now also sort results by Author and Title.

New Item selection: We now have a tick box next to each item. Once items have been selected they can be emailed, exported or saved to My Bibliography.
Emailing prompts for an email address and then sends the basic bibliographic information including a link to the full text for each selected item. Exporting allows the download of selected items in one of three formats compatible with the major reference management software.

My Bibliography: the new My Bibliography feature is only available to users logging in with a personalised Shibboleth or OpenAthens ID. If users are using IP based authentication then personalisation options are not available. My Bibliography allows you to build up a personal list of books and is saved against your user ID. This means the list is saved between sessions. My Bibliography can be accessed from the options on the top of the screen.

New Plain Text tag: All items have the tag Plain Text. If this is not clickable (greyed out) a "mouse over" message advices users that only an image of the book is available. At present this only affects books in EEBO that have not yet been keyed in.

New materials added to JISC MediaHub

JISC MediaHub now searches the My Leicestershire History Collection:
My Leicestershire History is a free local history resource containing photographs, films, sound recordings, and books about the history of Leicester and Leicestershire. This comprises five collections: East Midlands Oral History Archive, Ghost Signs of Leicestershire, Media Archive for Central England, BBC Radio Leicester and Vanished Leicester.

We plan to add more materials to JISC MediaHub in 2013
